The Carner's Jury Says That Was How Samuel Clayton's Life Ended.

Saturday afternoon about half-past three, Samuel Clayton, a colored boy, nine years old, was drowned in the back waters of Linestown Creek, under the Second street bridge. He was playing on the bank with his little brother, about the same age, and slipped into the water, which was about ten feet deep. The body was recovered thirty minutes after ward by Benjamin Cook. He was a son of Rachel Clayton, and lived in the Fifth Ward.

AND NOW THE LEDGER has a photograph of Colonel Leonidas Metcalfe, so the curiously inclined can see pictures of both Mr. Casto and Colonel Metcalfe by calling at the office. While playing with a Flobert rifle in Cynthia Saturday B. M. Tucker's son Ray, aged four, discharged the gun suddenly, and the ball took effect directly under the heart of Robert Polinder's son, Harold, aged 4 years, and there are but few chances for his recovery. Every well regulated family ought to furnish their children with a lot of these pretty playthings.

Harper, send the receiver for $25,000 attorney's fees. The Board of Health at Ashland has resigned in a body. The salary of the physician was $1 an hour when engaged; the City Council cut it down to 50 cents, and the Doctor quit. Then the Health Board had to raise it to $1 before they could get another Doctor. Again the Council cut the price to 50 cents, and the whole shooting match stopped down and out. Of course this is all on account of the McKinley Tariff.

A newspaper.

Jacob P. Downing probably the oldest citizen in the county, was in the city this morning on his way to Dover.

Downing was born in this county in the last week of the last month, and on almost the last day, of the eighteenth century—December 30th, 1799. His strength and activity are surprising for one of his years. He frequently walks as far as Dover, a distance of ten miles, and was about to start this morning, when his going to the same place persuaded him to accompany him. The old gentleman has made his home with his brother about five miles from Maysville on the Kenton Station Turnpike for the last twenty years.

J. LEWIS PATTON, representing the New York Mutual, is doing a nice business throughout the neighboring towns. His company is a good one, and Mr. Patton is a clever gentleman.

YESTERDAY afternoon one of the electric cars came near demolishing a buggy at Second and Wall. The horse got obstreperous and piloted the vehicle to close to the track. A young man and a young lady were badly scared, and the buggy slightly hurt in one of its wheels.

ATTORNEY GENERAL HENDRICK is building the handsome home in Franklin county. He bought a farm of 150 acres about four miles from Frankfort on the Versailles pike, and is putting up a palace of a home, which, it is said, will cost from $25,000 to $30,000. The house is nearly completed now, and Mr. Hendrick will bring his family down permanently before the summer is over. He thinks there is no more to the country air for children, and would not live in town. His term of office is but four years, but the fact that he is putting up such a home shows that he is not very apprehensive of the future.

In the case of the State National Bank of Maysville, Ky., vs. R. H. Ellison et al.,—on trial before Judge Sage at Cincinnati,—which is upon a creditor's bill to set aside mortgages of real estate alleged to be fraudulent, and subject the property to the payment of the complainant's claim, which amounts to about $5,000, it appears from the bill that, on the 14th of October, 1889, Ellison being insolvent, made an assignment under the insolvency laws of Ohio to his co-defendants, T. J. Shelton, W. A. Blair and W. H. Pownall, and the assignment was filed in the Probate Court of Adams county on the same day, and the assignees qualified as such.

On the 18th of October, 1889, Ellison made a composition agreement to take effect upon its signature by ninety per cent. of his creditors, by the terms of which twenty per cent. of the indebtedness of the creditors signing the agreement were to be paid in six months, forty per cent. in twenty-four months, and forty per cent. in thirty-six months from November 1, 1889, with four per cent. interest. The complainant did not sign this agreement, nor did they file any claim in the Probate Court. It appears from the bill that nothing was done in the Probate Court under the assignment subsequent to the qualification of the assignees, who were by the terms of the composition agreement made trustees for the creditors of Ellison. Ellison and wife executed to them mortgages upon all their real estate to secure the performance of the composition agreement, upon which twenty per cent. has been paid in six months, forty per cent. more is about to be paid according to the creditors who have signed the agreement. The bill sets up that the mortgages are fraudulent, and prays that they be set aside and the property applied to the payment of the complainant's claim.

The defendants filed a general demurrer upon the ground, first, that it appears from the bill that the complainant's claim had not been reduced to judgment when the bill was filed; second, that the Probate Court of Adams county has exclusive jurisdiction by virtue of the assignment over the lands in the mortgage; third, that under the Ohio statute the relief prayed for cannot be granted, but the proceeds of the lands, if the mortgages be set aside, must be applied to the payment of the creditors generally.

Judge Sage overruled the first objection upon the authority of Case vs. Beasbridge, 106 U. S. 888, and then recognizing the general rule that a creditor's bill can only be maintained after judgment has been recovered for the debt, execution issued and returned nulla bona, said that after all, the judgment and fruitless execution are only preliminary to the complainant's legal remedies have been exhausted, or that he without remedy at law, and that where it appears by the bill, as it does in this case, that the Probate Court is seized of the subject of an execution would be of no practical utility, neither judgment nor execution is a necessary prerequisite.

The second objection was held to be invalid, for the reason that in Smith Midgell vs. Phillips, 130 U. S. 240, the objection to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of the United States that the Probate Court had exclusive jurisdiction, could not be sustained, because, upon the allegations of the bill submitted by the complainant, it appeared that nothing had been done in that Court before the commencement of the suit except to file the voluntary assignment and to qualify the assignees, which is true in this case. The Court held that the Circuit Court had jurisdiction of a bill by citizens of other states who have not become parties to the proceedings in the State Court to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent or invalid as against them. That case, the Court said, was not to be taken as authority that nothing had been done in that Court before the commencement of the suit except to file the voluntary assignment and to qualify the assignees, which is true in this case. The Court held that the Circuit Court had jurisdiction of a bill by citizens of other states who have not become parties to the proceedings in the State Court to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent or invalid as against them. That case, the Court said, was not to be taken as authority that nothing had been done in that Court before the commencement of the suit except to file the voluntary assignment and to qualify the assignees, which is true in this case. The Court held that the Circuit Court had jurisdiction of a bill by citizens of other states who have not become parties to the proceedings in the State Court to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent or invalid as against them.

G. Bamback & Son for complainant; John W. Heron for defendants.

A Teaching Sister.

When Mrs. Helen E. Dean died she left a prattling child. After the body had been prepared for burial, and while loving ones were watching over it, the little tot approached the bier and innocently inquired, "Is my mamma asleep?"

IN HOC SIGNO VINCES.

MOST of the provisions of the so-called McKinley Tariff law have now been in force for a year. The principal exceptions are the transfer of raw sugar to the free McKinley Tariff, 1st, in force April 1st, and the increase of duty on tin plates, in force July 1st, 1901. Short as has been the life of this measure, and temporary as its influence must necessarily have been, it has already secured a niche in the country's history vouchsafed to few Congressional enactments.

Under mortgage to a faction of political theorists demanding as the price of their support a removal of all protective duties, or falling this, the nearest possible approach thereto that could command the necessary votes for its passage, the representatives of what some delight to call "the party of the people" yielded to the lash in the hand of King Canoe, and voted solidly against every provision of the bill—against free sugar as well as against lowering the tariff on steel rails, and every suggested provision for the effective collection of impost duties.

Passed in the face of such opposition, the law went into effect under an avalanche of invective and misrepresentation, calculated and designed to blind public sentiment to the wisdom of its provisions, and to embarrass those officials charged with its enforcement! Yet within the short period of its existence—in face of all impediments—the law has wrought out a vindication that at once brings confusion to its opponents and confirmation for the strongest predictions of its supporters.

None of the necessities of life affected by Tariff are higher now than one year ago. More men can now find employment at wages as high as were then paid. No industry has been impaired, unless it be that of the importer of foreign goods; while a number of foreign capitalists, recognizing the futility of further efforts at "revenue reform" in the direction of free foreign trade, and moving their plants to this country, when employed will be of our people, supplying all their varied from the stores of this country, of the one-tenth now sent

WASHINGTON'S MOTHER.

How she met her Son After His Seven Years' Absence.

When the tidings of the splendid success at Yorktown were brought direct from the general to his mother, she was moved to an exclamation of fervent thanksgiving: "This time the war is ended, and we shall be blessed with peace, happiness and independence, for at last our country is free," says Mrs. Ella Bassett Washington in the foreword. Shortly after the surrender of Cornwallis, Washington left Yorktown with a brilliant suite of French and American officers, and started upon his journey to Philadelphia, stopping on the way at Fredericksburg to visit his mother. It was nearly seven years since he had last seen her face, his mother was serene, but very quiet, only smiling to herself often than usual. But it was not the hero crowned that filled her thoughts, but the son who, after years of absence and danger, was coming back to her. On the 11th of November, 1781, the town of Fredericksburg was all aglow with joy and revelry. Washington, "in the midst of his numerous and brilliant suite," wrote Mr. Custis, "sent to apprise her [his mother] of his arrival, and to know when it would be her pleasure to receive him. . . . Alone and on foot, the general in chief of the combined armies of France and America, came to say in the grand old style of the day, 'the deliverer of his country, the hero of the hour, required to pay his humble tribute of duty to her who was venerated as the author of his being.' . . . When the warm embrace of greeting was over, looking into his face with England and abroad, she saw eyes kindled with maternal love, she said, tenderly: 'You are growing good, George; care and toil have made him a man, and in your face since I saw it last, more is said to have been singularly sweet and he forced his audience as he called him by name. She inquired as to his health, and she spoke much of old times and old friends, but of his glory not one word.'

EARLY IRON WORK.

Important Position of the Blacksmith in Early Times.

The blacksmith occupied an important position among the craftsmen of the middle ages, says Chambers' Journal. The insecurity of life and property, which was one of the chief grievances of the times, made strength of material indispensable, whether to guard the shrine of a saint or to protect after a more homely fashion the family chest or coffer. The strength and durability of iron led to its use for these defensive purposes from early times. But the workman of the middle ages was not content to allow strength and usefulness of form to go together, but contrived to breathe a spirit of beauty into his designs without sacrificing the use to which the material was destined. Thus wrought iron formed the object of much artistic work both in England and abroad. The strength and general use malleable iron was produced first from the ore with charcoal fuel by continuous working. Success was first won by a chief workman of the iron industry. The earliest positive record of the trade there is contained in a grant made by King Henry III. to the town of Lewes in 1266, by which the inhabitants were empowered to raise toll for the repair of the town walls after the battle. Every smith of iron destined for sale which came from the neighboring "wald" was to pay one penny toll. In 1294 a sum of money was paid to a certain Master Henry of Lewes for the ironwork to the monument of Henry III. in Westminster Abbey, which reminds us that talented smiths were brought from long distances for important works.

ENGLISH KNIGHTS.

Their Descendants Are Requested to Return Their Insignia.

The representatives of deceased knights of the bath recently, says the London World, have never been required to return their insignia, although of considerable value, the collar having been made of pure gold. Knights of St. Michael and St. George have not been relieved of this obligation; but their insignia are not of great value. The insignia of knight of the garter, the thistle and St. Patrick, respectively must be returned, and the son of a deceased knight of the garter is nearly always greeted as an heir by the sovereign when it is delivered.

During Queen Victoria's reign there have been twelve vacancies in which the queen did not personally receive the insignia of the deceased knight. When a foreign sovereign dies who is a knight of the garter his insignia comes back directly to the monarch through the foreign office. Prince Albert's insignia of the garter is preserved by the queen in the private apartments at Windsor castle, and George IV. left orders for his insignia to be buried with him.

Serfdom in Spain.

The king of Spain is said to promulgate the streets of his capital divided in plain clothes for the purpose of learning the true condition of the people and inflicting reforms, several of which have already been started. The evils in Spain are serfdom, slavery, the farming of taxes and the corruption of justice. Serfdom is universal, with the result that a man is quite uncertain when he may call his time and his labor his own. For so many months in the year he is bound to serve his chief, and at any time he may be called to "special kind of service." For instance, when a prince is on his travels every district through which he passes is called upon to supply him with food and transport. If news comes that a prince or high official is traveling it is not uncommon for owners of loads to require a European subject to be a poor charge of them, while they themselves disappear into the jungle. Elephants are always be taken for service.
